COLLIER'S

"Fresh from the gardens"

A Call To Service

Throughout Canada and the United States national campaigns are now in progress to raise funds and supplies wherewith to meet the needs of hundreds of thousands of people without employment and lacking the very necessities of life.

In the United States a great voluntary organization has been called into existence upon invitation of President Hoover, and it is now engaged in a whirlwind campaign organized upon similar lines to those followed during the war and in the recent Red Cross disaster appeal. The press, the theatres, the radio, the pulpit, every known kind of organization, all are being mobilized with a view to raising tens of millions of dollars within a few weeks.

In Canada, the Federal and Provincial Governments have assumed responsibility for relief measures, assisted by the municipalities. During the last session of parliament, following Premier Bennett's description of the existing situation in Western Canada as "a national calamity," the House of Commons unanimously voted an unlimited amount of relief. It was not made a party issue, but the Government's request for adequate funds was supported by Conservative, Liberal, Progressive and Labor alike.

But in Canada, as in the United States, the magnitude of the need, and the urgency of the claims of tens of thousands of people upon the sympathy and practical support of their fellow citizens, calls for the active co-operation of all people and organizations. The problem is too big for even the united forces of Federal and Provincial Governments.

The Prime Minister of Canada has, therefore, made an appeal to all the people of Canada, and all the organizations of Canada, to support a nation-wide campaign to raise funds to supplement the efforts of government in meeting the needs of those who must be supplied with food, clothing, fuel and shelter throughout the coming winter months.

In other times of national disaster, such as the Halifax explosion and the northern Ontario fire, or international disasters like the Japanese earthquake, the people of Western Canada organized their forces and gave generously to the needs of the stricken. This year not so much will be expected from the people of the Prairie Provinces; instead of being given, thousands of our people will be the recipients. It is because of the Western situation that the present appeal is made; it is in the West that conditions approaching a national disaster exist.

Nevertheless, there is much that our Western people can do to assist each other; much that neighbor can do for neighbor, and friend for friend. There are thousands of us who can still spare a little something for somebody else. Quite a considerable number of people have already "adopted" some other person or family and have been assisting them for months past, and will continue to do so while the necessity exists. This quiet, unostentatious "adoption" of others in need can, without very great sacrifice on the part of many, be very greatly extended. It will assist Governments in meeting their problems; it will help to keep down the mounting burden of public debt and taxation which is liable to seriously cripple our future activities and return to better times; it will save some of the more sensitive people from "going on relief" which some regard with almost as much dismay as starvation itself.

Let us, therefore, re-capture some of the old war-times spirit of service and sacrifice. Let us feel the thrill of a great spiritual experience. Let us do our part, small though it may be, to make adequate provisions for those in need in our own communities, so that the fear of cold and hunger will be banished from the hearts of thousands of our fellow-citizens. Such gifts bless the giver. It will lift your own spirit. It will help to end the depression and lay a firm foundation for better times. These great national campaigns in Canada and the United States may well prove the turning point in that direction. Therefore, do your part, liberally as you can; most gladly in any event.

The Greater Trouble

Debts Contracted In Prosperous Times Are Burden Now

"We would not be too badly off if it weren't for our debts," remarked a man at a rural gathering the other night.

There is a world of meaning behind such a remark. In most places in Canada in the country districts there is plenty of food and by turning a hand to this or that a little money can be brought in to keep the wheels moving. Expenses are cut, the bone and there is a general attitude in almost every quarter to make the best of things.

The debts are the trouble. Even if collection of them is not being pressed they remain a grim shadow in the background, a growing shadow on account of the mounting interest charges.

There is too much debt, some of which was incurred much more cheerfully than it can be paid. There ought to be a moral somewhere about this—Regina Leader Post (Evening).

Ruling On Aviation

Provinces Have Control Only Within Their Own Boundaries. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has allowed the appeal of the Dominion Government of Canada against a decision of the supreme court of Canada on the reference of the question of whether the Dominion or the Provincial authorities have jurisdiction over aviation matters in Canada.

The supreme court had decided the Dominion may control such aeronautical matters as are involved in international affairs and such aerial activities as the Dominion itself engages in, but ruled the provinces have jurisdiction to control and legislate on aviation matters within their own boundaries.

The supreme tribunal, however, upheld the Dominion Government's contention to supreme jurisdiction over aviation matters in Canada. Their lordships' decision incidentally upheld the validity of Dominion aeronautical legislation which had been challenged by the provinces.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green velvet—imported dress—lost color so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it for some time, and I was not at all sure it was any more. On hearing the reason, I decided to dye it. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress for just the price of one package of Diamond Dyes."

"I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They are so easy to use, and I can not say an expert dye but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to do everything I try. I am completely and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends, never know the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are really at all."

Mrs. R.F., Quebec.

Honey As Antifreeze

Gums Up The Works

Not So Good For Automobile Radiators, It Is Found

While honey is one of the choicest and most valuable of foods it is not so good when used as an antifreeze compound in automobile radiators. It makes a frost resisting mixture, a solution of two parts honey to one of water will withstand a temperature of zero but such a solution is too viscous to circulate freely at low temperatures in automobile radiators. Unless the cooling system is absolutely leak-proof and the cylinder head gaskets absolutely tight some of the honey will seep into the cylinder head fouling spark plugs, caking the fouling with carbon and so polluting the crank case oil as to render it useless as a lubricant—in other words it gums up the works.

Pacific Relations Meet

Fourth Biennial Conference Is Held At Shanghai

The fourth biennial conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations, the non-official group for the discussion of international problems, was held in Shanghai. It was the first such conference in China, the first two held in Japan in Hawaii and the third in Kyoto, Japan. Despite the Sino-Japanese difficulties in Manchuria, complete delegations from both Japan and China were present. Dr. Huashih, Chinese poet, philosopher, and cultural leader, president of the conference said Japanese and Chinese members realized good might result from their meeting together as enlightened men and women "regardless of the calamities which befall their countries through the folly of their rulers."

Bread Of Asthma makes countless thousands miserable. Night after night the attacks return and even when brief respite is given the mind is still in torment from anxious anticipation. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy changes all that. Relief comes, and at once, while future attacks are ward off, leaving the afflicted one in a state of peace and happiness he once believed he could never enjoy. Inexpensive and sold almost everywhere.

Canada's Boat Industry

The building of small pleasure boats and canoes has expanded in a marked degree within the past five years by 30 per cent. in the number of establishments and by 88 per cent. in the value of the products made. The centre of the industry is Peterborough, Ont., where about 25 per cent. of the craft are turned out, the value of which runs to about $600,000, while the production of all Canada is around $2,000,000.

NEURITIS HAS GONE!

Banished by Kruschen

"I had acute neuritis in the shoulder and left arm, due to exposure to bad weather," writes the Rev. H. B. T. It was impossible to lift the arm to dress, to use it in any way, and, worse, the pain was dreadful. All external applications were made, but it completely normal again by keeping the parts affected warm and taking daily, early in the morning, Kruschen Salt in a tumbler of hot water. It took nearly a month, but every vestige of neuritis has gone.

Neuritis is typical of a dozen other complaints—some minor, some very serious—which all result from impurities in the blood. And it is impure blood, circulating all over the system and setting up inflammation in the tissues, that causes those excruciating pains.

Kruschen Salt can be safely trusted to set the matter right. Because Kruschen contains just what Nature needs to purify your internal organs, back into a healthy, normal condition.

Britain's Population Grows

Increase in England and Wales Two Million in a Decade

The census figures bring home and emphasize a fact that underlies and conditions every one of our social and political problems.

The population of England and Wales is 40,000,000, as near as may be. Add the figure previously given for Scotland, just under 5,000,000, and we get a total population of 45,000,000 for Great Britain.

The number of people in England and Wales is increasing at the rate of 2,000,000 every decade.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century it was only 9,000,000. At the beginning of Queen Victoria's reign it was only 15,000,000. At the time of her diamond jubilee it was only 30,000,000.

Were the present rate of increase to continue, England and Wales in the year 2031 would be something like 60,000,000. The density of population, already greater than that of any other country, would be 1,300 to the square mile, falling some thousands unparalleled technological revolution, would be beyond the capacity of any country to maintain.

It is only the blindest faith in material progress that dare count on such a revolution to avert the terrible consequences that must follow the excessive increase of population upon the means of support.

Now it is possible to assume that the surplus could be disposed of by emigration. The great mass movement of population outward from Europe to the new world is already a thing of the past. There is no reason to think the new countries will lower the barriers which—under pressure of their economic situation—they have raised against immigration.—Daily Herald, London, England.

Thirst For Knowledge

Two Children Support Themselves By Trapping While Attending School

Supporting themselves by trapping, two children aged seven and nine, endured the hardships of winter in the north country living in a tent so that they could attend school.

This was the story told at Toronto, Ontario, by Dr. J. H. MacDougall of the Provincial Department of Education, addressing the convention of the National League of Compulsory Education.

In their thirst for learning the children, David and Arthur Clement, whose mother had died and whose father had returned to his trap line around Hudson Bay, munched 40 miles with a dog team, pitched their tent in five feet of snow in a spruce forest, and attended the school—all through the winter on the five days each month in which it was in their district.

When the temperature sank to 55 degrees below zero they did not miss a day, Dr. MacDougall said.

Fine Collection of Paintings

One of the finest collections of paintings in the world is soon to be gathered in a new gallery at the Vatican. The gallery covers an area of more than 9,000 square yards. Half a dozen spacious salons will house paintings of six principal art schools, from the Byzantine to that of the 18th century. Two special galleries are completely dedicated to the work of Leonardo da Vinci and of Raphael.

Some Secrets Of Success

Twelve Rules For People Who Want To Get Ahead

Work hard. Hard work is the best investment a man can make.

Study hard. Knowledge enables a man to work more intelligently and effectively.

Have initiative. Ruts often deepen into graves.

Love your work. Then you will find pleasure in mastering it.

Be exact. Slipshod methods bring slipped results.

Have the spirit of conquest. This you can successfully battle and overcome difficulties.

In all things do your best. The gain which has done his best has done everything. The man who has done less than his best has done nothing.

Cultivate personality. Personality is to a man what perfume is to a flower.

Help and share with others. The real test of business greatness lies in giving opportunity to others.

Be democratic. Unless you feel right towards your fellowmen you can never be a successful leader of men.

Honesty is the best policy. Be honest, first of all, with your own conscience.

Alfalfa Proves Valuable

Crop Near Lethbridge Netted Farmer More Than Grain

R. Osmond, living five miles east of Lethbridge, operates on irrigated land which is naturally expected to produce more than non-irrigated areas.

On two acres he has in the past season taken wonderful crops which have a much higher value than grain. On the first acre which was in alfalfa he applied manure and irrigated five times during the season. From the first cutting there were three tons; the second cutting two tons; the third cutting one ton—altogether six tons per acre.

The second acre was under hood crops which gave two and a half tons of cabbage, two tons potatoes, twenty tons of alfalfa, and which was measured at the rate of ten tons per acre. At prevailing prices the value of the crops produced on the two acres was about $225 or $112.50 per acre. Had the two acres produced wheat at the rate of forty-five bushels to the acre, the value of the crop at present wheat prices would have been $37.50 including the bonus, or $18.90 per acre.

Maharaja Of Kashmir

World's Richest Man

Jewels Are Priceless and Annual Income Is Over Two Millions

A notable absentee from the British Round-Table Conference this year is the Maharaja of Kashmir, Sir Hari Singh, who took such a prominent part in the 1920 discussion of the value of a fresh outbreak of rioting in his State, following Moslem agitation against the Hindus, emphasizes the necessity of his presence at home. The Maharaja, who is a keen social and industrial reformer, is probably the richest man alive. His annual income is said to total two and a quarter millions, and his jewels are priceless. At his coronation, six years ago, he wore wonderful diamonds, rubies and emeralds, and when a boy he was a page of honor to Lord Curzon, then Viceroy of India, his golden robe and pearl chain cost a million pounds. At King George's Durbar he wore a dress of gold glistening with diamonds worth three millions.

Waxworks Showing Age

Figures In Westminster Abbey Rather the Worse For Wear

The waxwork figures in Westminster Abbey, representing Henry VII, Queen Elizabeth, James I., Charles II, William and Mary, Nelson, Pitt, and others, are in rather a bad way. It is doubtful how long their clothes will hold together. King Charles' cuffs are black with age and several buttons are missing from his red velvet coat. Henry VII's figure is decaying, and his feet are almost severed from his body. James I., whose trousers bear a close resemblance to plus fours, has no head, and his wife, Queen Anne, no feet.

Both Premiums and Losses Much Lower

Marked Drop Shown in Business of Life Insurance Companies

Business done by the 53 life insurance companies operating in western Canada in 1931, amounted to only about one-sixth of the 1930 total, but both gains and losses of the companies being reduced to the proportion of the previous year's business.

Net losses amounted to $403,061 in 1931, as against losses of $2,461,328 last year. This represents a saving of $2,058,267 in 1931 from the 1930 figure.

At the same time the gross premiums in the three prairie provinces dropped from $2,983,389 last year to $451,120 in 1931. Accordingly the gross income of the companies decreased by $2,532,269 during the present year.

These conclusions were to be drawn from figures supplied to The Regina Leader-Post by H. H. Campkin, secretary of the Canadian Life Underwriters' Association.

Alberta has suffered particularly heavy losses in proportion to the premiums paid for the past few years. Mr. Campkin indicated.

"From the repeated disastrous experience in the province of Alberta, many of the companies are seriously considering withdrawing from that province or from the life insurance business entirely," he said. "Three companies in business since 1916 have already signified their intention to discontinue writing this class of insurance."

Of the 53 companies whose premiums and losses were represented in the figures he said, 36 were now writing in Alberta, 51 in Saskatchewan and 46 in Manitoba. From the gross premium totals the expenses of carrying on business would have to be deducted.

Demonstration By Montana Farmer Shows It Is Possible

It may not be long now before farmers throughout the country will be doing their plowing by radio. J. J. Lynch of Miles City, Montana, demonstrated this possibility by plowing around a thirty-acre field with a tractor operated by radio.

Two hundred expert electricians, radio operators and business men from most of the Central States witnessed the demonstration. They said it was the first time in history that a tractor, so operated, had actually plowed ground.

Gifts For Mussolini

Shipment Of Plums From Nelson, B.C. For Italy's Premier

A gift shipment of plums from a Nelson, B.C. orchard will leave here on S.S. California, for Benito Mussolini, Italy's premier, according to the Empire Shipping Company. The fruit is the gift of G. Mado, of Nelson. Mr. Mado is a warm admirer of Il Duce. Express company officials state that Fascist residents in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan send many gifts to the Italian leader.

New Zealand Trip Suggested

Suggestion that a Canadian trade delegation composed of 30 or 40 of the Dominion's leading manufacturers and business men visit New Zealand and Fiji to foster trade between those countries and Canada, was made by F. C. Brown, chairman of the B.C. division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

French Remove Tons Of Dust From

Normandy's famous Gothic cathedral, Notre Dame de Rouen, has just emerged spick and span from its first vacuum cleaning. Five tons of dust were removed in the process.

Every corner of the great building with its lofty towers and innumerable chapels crowded with tomb, was penetrated and cleaned. The stone saints and kings on the west front received a scrubbing, their hands and faces were washed and their robes relieved of the incrustations of centuries.

In order to accomplish this cleaning, special instruments had to be constructed which included "flying scaffolding" and "rolling platforms." Incidentally, four paintings of Biblical subjects, forgotten for many years, were discovered in one of the towers by the cleaners.

The success of this cleaning has been such that it is expected that other cathedrals, especially those containing fine rose windows and stained glass, will follow this example.

THE HOUSE OF DREAMS-COME-TRUE

—BY—

Presently her attention was attracted by the solitary figure of a man who swept past her in the course of making a complete circle of the rink. He skimmed the ice with the free assurance of an expert, and as he passed, Jean caught a fleeting glimpse of a supple, sinewy figure, and of a lean, dark face, down-bent, with a cap crummed low on to the somewhat receding brows.

There was something curiously distinctive about the man. Brief as was her vision of him, it possessed an odd definiteness—a vividness of impression that was rather startling.

He flashed by, his arms folded across his chest, moving with long, rhythmic strokes which soon carried him to the further side of the rink. Jean's eyes followed him interestedly. He was unmistakably an Englishman, and he seemed to be an solitary as herself, but, unlike her, he appeared indifferent to the fact, absorbed in his own thoughts which, to judge by the sullen, brooding expression of his face, were not particularly pleasant ones. Soon she lost sight of him amid the scattered groups of smoothly gliding figures. The scene reminded her of a cinema show. People darted suddenly into the picture, materializing in full detail in the space of a moment, then rushed out of it again, dwindling into insignificant black dots which merged themselves into the continuously shifting throng beyond.

At last she bent her steps towards the lower end of the rink, by common consent reserved for beginners in the art of skating. She had not skated for several years, owing to a severe strain which had left her with a weak ankle, and she felt somewhat nervous about starting again.

Rather slowly she fastened on her skates and ventured tentatively on to the ice. For a few minutes she suffered from a devastating feeling that her legs didn't belong to her, and wished heartily that she had never quitted the safe security of her foot, but before long her confidence returned, and with it that flexible ease of balance which, once acquired, is never really lost.

In a short time she was thoroughly enjoying the rapid, effortless motion, and felt herself equal to steering a safe course between the narrow limits of the "Mugs Corner"—as that portion of the ice allotted to novices was unkindly dubbed.

She struck out for the middle of the rink, gradually increasing her speed and revelling in the sting of the keen, cold air against her face. Then, all at once, it seemed as though the surface grew very bumpy beneath her foot. She lurched forward, flung violently off her balance, and in the same moment the sharp clink of metal upon the ice betrayed the cause. One of her skates insecurely fastened, had come off.

She staggered wildly, and in another instant would have fallen had not someone, swift as a shadow, glided suddenly abreast of her and slipping a supporting arm round her waist, skated smoothly beside her, little by little, slackening their mutual pace until Jean, on one blade all this time, could stop without danger of falling.

As they glided to a standstill, she turned to offer her thanks and found herself looking straight into the lean, dark face of the Englishman who had passed her when she had been watching the skaters.

He lifted his cap, and as he stood for a moment bareheaded beside her, she noticed with a curious little shock—half surprised, half appreciative—that on the left temple his dark brown hair was streaked with a single pure white lock, as though a finger had laid upon the hair and bleached it where it lay. It conferred a certain air of distinction—an added value of contrast—just as the sharp black shadow in a neutral-tinted picture gives sudden significance to the whole conception.

The stranger was regarding Jean with a flicker of amusement in his grey eyes.

"That was a near thing!" he observed.

Evidently he judged her to be a Frenchwoman, for he spoke in French—very fluently, but with an unmistakably English accent. Instinctively Jean, who all her life had been as free for a moment bareheaded beside her, she noticed with a curious little shock—half surprised, half appreciative—that on the left temple his dark brown hair was streaked with a single pure white lock, as though a finger had laid upon the hair and bleached it where it lay. It conferred a certain air of distinction—an added value of contrast—just as the sharp black shadow in a neutral-tinted picture gives sudden significance to the whole conception.

She was breathing rather quickly, a little shaken by the suddenness of the incident, and his face took on a shade of concern.

"You're not hurt, I hope? Did you twist your ankle?"

"No, oh, no," she smiled up at him. "I can't have fastened my skate on properly, and when I tried to get up, I'm afraid I rather lost my head. You see, I said quite explanatorily, 'I haven't skated for some years, and I was never very proficient.'"

"I see," he said gravely. "It was a little rash of you to start again quite alone, wasn't it?"

"I suppose it was. However, as you luckily happened to be there to save me from the consequences, no harm is done. Thank you so much."

"There was no dismissal in her voice," he said simply.

He so evidently expected her to comply with his suggestion that, almost without her own volition, she found herself moving with him towards the edge of the rink, her hands grasped in a close, steady clasp, and a moment later she was scrambling up the bank. Once more on level ground, she made a movement to withdraw her hands.

"I can manage quite well now," she said rather nervously. There was something in that strong, firm grip of his which sent a curious tremor of consciousness through her.

He made no answer, but released her instantly, and in her anxiety to show him how well she could manage she hurried on, struck the tip of the skate she was still wearing against a little hemlock of frozen snow, and all but fell. He caught her as she stumbled.

"I think," he remarked drily, "you would do well to sacrifice your independence till your feet are on more equal terms with one another."

Jean laughed ruefully.

"I think I should," she agreed meekly.

He led her to where the prone trunk of a tree offered a seat of sorts, then went in search of the missing skate. Returning in a few moments, he knelt beside her, and asked her, "Is this all right?"

"Yes, it is," she answered, and he extended towards him.

"You're much too incompetent to be out on the ice alone," he remarked as he buckled the last strap.

A faint flush of annoyance rose in Jean's cheeks at the uncomplimentary frankness of the observation.

"What are your friends thinking of to let you do such a thing?" he pursued, blandly ignoring her mute indignation.

"I have no friends here. I am—my own mistress," she replied rather tartly.

He was still kneeling in the snow in front of her. Now he sat back on his heels and subjected her face to a sharp, swift scrutiny. Almost, she thought, she detected a sudden veiled suspicion in the keen glance.

"You're not the sort of girl to be knocking about—alone—at a hotel," he said at last, as though satisfied.

"How do you know what I'm like?" she retorted quickly. "You are hardly qualified to judge."

"Pardon, mademoiselle, I do not know what you are—but I do know very certainly that you are not. And—smiling a little—"I think we have just had our own demonstration of the fact that you're not accustomed to fend for yourself."

There was something singularly attractive about his smile. It lightened the whole face, contradicting the settled gravity that seemed habitual to it, and Jean found herself smiling back in response.

"Well, as a matter of fact, I'm not," she admitted. "I came here with my father, and he was—suddenly called away. I am going on to stay with friends."

"This is my last day here," he remarked with sudden irrelevance. "I am off first thing tomorrow morning."

"You're not stopping at the hotel, are you?"

He shook his head.

"No, I'm staying in a friend's chalet a little way beyond it. Madam, you, mademoiselle, you will catch cold sitting there. Are you too frightened to try the ice again?"

He seemed to assume that her next essay would be made in his company. Jean spoke a little hurriedly.

"Oh, no, I was supposed to have a lesson with Monsieur Griolet this morning. He is an instructor," she explained. "But you are engaged, and someone else when I came out."

"And which is this Monsieur Griolet? Can you see him?"

Jean's glance ranged over the scattered figures on the rink.

"Yes, there he is."

His eyes followed the direction indicated.

"He seems to be well occupied at the moment," he commented. "Suppose—would you allow me to act as your coach instead?"

She hesitated. This stranger appeared to be uncomplacingly progressive in his tendencies.

"I'm perfectly capable," he added curtly.

"I'm sure of that. But—"

His eyes twinkled.

"But it would not be quite 'comme il faut'?" Is that it?"

"Well, it wouldn't, would it?" she retorted.

His face grew suddenly grave, and she noticed that when in repose there were deep, straight lines on either side of his mouth—lines that are usually only furrowed by severe suffering, either mental or physical.

"Mademoiselle," he said quietly. "To-day, it seems, we are two very lonely people. Couldn't we forget what is 'comme il faut' for once? We shall probably never meet again. We know nothing of each other—just 'ships that pass in the night.' Let us keep one another company—take this one day together."

He drew a step nearer to her.

"Will you?" he said. "Will you?"

He was looking down at her with eyes that were curious, bright and compelling. There was a tense note in his voice which once again sent that disconcerting tremor of consciousness tingling through her blood.

She knew that his proposal was impertinent, unbecomingly even regarded from the standpoint of the modern broad interpretation of the word convention, and that by every law of Mrs. Grundy she ought to snub him soundly for his presumption. And yet, she found herself looking at him with the dignity of a queen.

But she did none of these things. Instead, she stood hesitating, alternately flushing and paling beneath the oddly concentrated gaze he bent on her.

"I swear it shall hold you to nothing," he pursued urgently. "Not even to recognizing me in the street should our ways ever chance to cross again. Though that is hardly likely to occur."

With a shrug—"seeing that, mademoiselle, is French and that I am rarely out of England. It will be just one day that we shall have shared together out of the whole of life, and after that the darkness again and a silence."

"I can promise you the violence of my regret," he added with a sudden harsh infection.

It was that bitter note which won the day. In some subtle, subconscious way Jean sensed the pain which lay in the back of it. She answered impulsively:

"Very well. It shall be as you wish."

A rarely sweet smile curved the man's grave lips.

"Thank you," he said simply.

CHAPTER IV.
The Stolen Day

"Encore une fois! Bravo! That went better!"

Monsieur Griolet's understudy had amply justified his claim to capability.

After a morning's tuition at his hands, Jean found her progress in the art of skating considerably enhanced. She was even beginning to master the mysteries of "cross-cut" and "rocking turns," and a somewhat attenuated figure eight lay freshly scored on the ice to her credit.

"You are really a wonderful instructor," she acknowledged, surveying the graven witness to her progress with considerable satisfaction.

Her self-appointed teacher smiled.

"There is something to be said for the pupil, also," he replied. "But now—glancing at his watch—"I vote we call a halt for lunch."

"Lunch!" Jean's glance measured the distance to the hotel with some dismay.

"But not lunch at the hotel," interposed her companion quickly. "Jean regarded him with curiosity."

"Where then, monsieur?"

"To the hotel," he pointed towards the pine-woods. "Above the woods there is a hut of sorts—erected as a shelter in case of sudden storms for people coming up from the lower valley to Montclair and beyond. It's a rough little shack, but the woods there are very well as a temporary safe haven. It isn't a long climb," he added persuasively. "Are you too tired to take it on after your recent exertion?"

"Not, in the least. But are you suggesting a seaside refuge of that description to be miraculously endowed with a well-furnished larder?"

"No. But, I think my knapsack can make good the deficiency," he replied composedly.

Jean looked at him with dancing eyes. Having once yielded to the day's unconventional adventure, she had surrendered herself wholeheartedly to the enjoyment of it.

She made one reservation, however. Some instinct of self-protection prevented her from enlightening her companion as to her partly English nationality. There was no real necessity for it, seeing that he spoke French with such perfect ease, and his assumption that she was a French woman seemed in some way to limit the feeling of intimacy, conferring on her, as it were, a little of the freedom of an incognito.

"A la bonne heure," he exclaimed gaily. "So you invite me to share your lunch, monsieur le professeur?"

"I've invited you to share my day," he replied, smiling.

"You're a little late," she said, as he stepped to the bank, and when he had helped her off her skates and removed his own, slinging them over his arm, they started off along the steep white track which wound its way upwards through the pine-woods.

As they left the bright sunlight that glittered on the snowy slopes behind them, it seemed as though they plunged suddenly into another world—a still, mysterious, twilight place where the snow underfoot muffled the sound of their steps and the long shadows of the pines barred their path with sinister, distorted shapes.

Jean, always sensitive to her surroundings, shivered a little.

"It's rather eerie, isn't it?" she said. "It's just as if someone had suddenly turned the lights out."

"Quite a nice bit of symbolism," he returned enigmatically.

"How? I don't think I understand," she laughed to herself.

"How would you? You're young. Fate doesn't come along and snuff out the lights for you when you are—what shall we say? Eighteen?"

"You're two years out," replied Jean composedly.

"As much? Then let's hope you'll have so much the longer to wait before Madame Destiny comes round with her snuffers."

He spoke with a kind of bitter humor, the backwash surging of some storm through which he must have passed. Jean looked across at him with a vague trouble in her face.

"Then, do you think," she spoke hesitatingly, "do you believe it is inevitable that she will come—sooner or later?"

"I hope not—to you," he said gently. "But she comes to most of us."

She longed to put another question, but there, at the very last, she saw the voice—a kind of "thus far shall she come and no further"—that warned her to probe no deeper. Whatever it was of bitterness that lay in the Englishman's past, he had no intention of sharing the knowledge with his chance companion of a day. He seemed to have become absorbed once more in his own thoughts, and for a time they tramped along together in silence.

The ascent steepened perceptibly, and Jean, light and active as she was, found it hard work to keep pace with the man's steady, swinging stride. Apparently his thoughts estranged him to the exclusion of everything else, for he appeared to have utterly forgotten her existence. It was only when a slip of her foot on the beaten surface of the snow wrung a quick exclamation from her that he paused, wheeling round in consternation.

"Be my pardon! I'm walking on your legs! Why on earth didn't you stop me?"

There was something irresistibly boyish about the quick apology. Jean laughed, a little breathless from the snow's climb uphill.

"You seem to be bent on getting to the top in the least possible time," she replied demurely. "That I didn't like to disappoint you."

"I'm afraid I make a poor sort of guide," she admitted. "I was thinking of something else. You must forgive me."

They resumed their climb more leisurely. The trees were thinning a bit now, and ahead, between the tall, straight, slender trunks, the snow-laden branches, they could catch glimpses of the white world beyond.

Presently they came out above the pine-wood on to the edge of a broad plateau and Jean uttered an exclamation of delight, gazing, spell-bound at the scene thus suddenly unfolded.

Behind them, in the pine-wooded valley, a frozen reach of water gleamed like a dull sheet of metal, while before them, far above, stretched the distance of mountains, pinnacle after pinnacle, capped with snow, thrusting up into the cloud-swept sky.

Through rifts in the cloud—almost, it seemed, torn in the breast of heaven by those towering peaks—the sun shone straight in long shafts, chequering the snows with shimmering patches of pale gold.

"It was worth the climb, then?" the Englishman, his gaze on Jean's rapt face, broke the silence abruptly.

"It was," she said, with a smile, almost blinding her with the fury of their onslaught, whilst her feet slipped and slid on the newly fallen snow as she trudged along beside the Englishman.

"This is a good preparation for a dance!" she gasped breathlessly, forcing her chilled lips to a smile.

"For a dance? What dance?"

"There's a fancy dress ball at the hotel tonight. There won't be—much of a dance, will there?"

The Englishman laughed suddenly. "My chief concern is to get you back to the hotel—alive," he observed grimly.

Jean looked at him quickly.

"You've had as that?" she asked more soberly.

"No. At least I hope not. I didn't mean to frighten you"—he smiled. "It seemed a trifle incongruous to be contemplating a dance when we may be struggling through several feet of snow in half an hour."

The fierce gusts of wind, lashing the snow about them in bewildering eddies, made conversation difficult, and they pushed on in a silence broken only by an occasional word of encouragement from the Englishman.

"All right?" he queried once, as Jean passed, battered and spent with the fury of the storm.

She nodded speechlessly. She had no breath left to answer, but once again her lips curved in a plucky little smile. A fresh onslaught of the wind forced them onwards, and she staggered a little as it blustered by.

"Here," he said quickly. "Take my arm. It will be better when we get into the pine-wood. The trees there will give us some protection."

They struggled forward again, arm in arm. The swirling snow had blown out to the distant mountains; lowering storm-films clouded a grey twilight of the day, through which they could just discern ahead a vague, formless darkness of the pine-wood.

Another ten minutes' walking brought them to it, only to find that the blunted edge of the storm was almost counterbalanced by the added difficulties of the surrounding gloom. High up overhead they could hear the ominous crack and swing of great branches shaken like tops in the wind, and now and again the sharper crack of some limb wrenched violently from its parent trunk. Once there came the echoing crash of a tree torn up bodily and flung to earth.

"It's worse here," declared Jean. "I think—with a nervous laugh—"I shall have served its purpose. The kind of 'travelers' rest' was provided by the fragments of appreciation, both in prose and verse, that were to be found inscribed in a species of 'distemper' on the wall of the pine-wood. The lunch that followed was a merry little meal, the two conversing with a happy intimacy and freedom from reserve based on the reassuring knowledge that they would, in all probability, never meet again. After-wards, they bent their 'surge' to concerting a suitable inscription for insertion in the 'Visitors' Book,' squabbling like a couple of children over the particular form it should take.

So absorbed were they in the discussion that they failed to notice the perceptible cooling of the temperature. The sun no longer warmed the roof of the hut, and there was a desolate note in the sudden gusts of wind which shook the door at frequent intervals as though trying to attract the attention of those within. Presently a louder rattle than usual, coinciding with a chance pause in the conversation, roused them effectually.

The Englishman's keen glance flashed to the little window at the back of the hut, and he saw that there was visible a dancing, whirling blur of white.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed in good English. "It's snowing like the very dickens!"

In two strides he had reached the door, and, throwing it open, peered out. A draught of icy air rushed into the hut, accompanied by a flurry of snow driven on the wind.

"When he turned back, he had assumed a sudden look of gravity."

"We must go at once," he said, speaking in French again and apparently unconscious of his momentary lapse into his native tongue. "If we wait we shall be able to get back at all. The snow drifts quickly in the valley. Half an hour more of this and we shouldn't be able to get through."

Jean thrust the Visitors' Book back into its box and began hastily repacking her companion's knapsack, but he stopped her almost roughly.

"Never mind that. Fasten that fur thing round your throat and come on. There's no taking chances in a blizzard like this. Don't you understand?"—almost roughly. "If we waste time we may have to spend the night here."

Impelled by the sudden urgency of his tones, Jean followed him swiftly to the door, and the wind, as though balked by her haste, snatched the door from her grasp and drove it to with a menacing thud behind them.

CHAPTER V.
Among the Snows

As Jean stepped outside the hut it seemed as though she had walked straight into the heart of the storm. The bitter, ice-laden blast that bore down from the mountains caught away her breath, the fine driving flakes, crystal and whirling, face, almost blinding her with the fury of their onslaught, whilst her feet slipped and slid on the newly fallen snow as she trudged along beside the Englishman.

"This is a good preparation for a dance!" she gasped breathlessly, forcing her chilled lips to a smile.

So absorbed were they in the dis-

ussion that they failed to notice the perceptible cooling of the temperature. The sun no longer warmed the roof of the hut, and there was a desolate note in the sudden gusts of wind which shook the door at frequent intervals as though trying to attract the attention of those within. PAYNE WINS AT RED DEER

In the bye-election held at Red Deer on Monday, in which four candidates were in the field for the vacant seat, Mr. W. E. Payne, Conservative, defeated Mr. J. H. Baster, Liberal, by a substantial majority. The fight was between Mr. Payne and the U.P.A. candidate, R. L. Gaetz, General Merchant of Red Deer, the two other candidates, Mr. James Bannerman, Liberal, and Mr. Bray, Communist, receiving only a small vote.

Mr. Payne's majority is in the neighborhood of 150. This seat is a serious loss to the U.P.A., and never in the history of the Province was such a strenuous campaign put up by the Farmers' Government. Premier Brownlee and the Attorney-General, with other members of the cabinet, put in ten days hard work throughout the constituency in Mr. Gaetz' interests, but the voters evidently thought it was time for a change. In an interview, Premier Brownlee attributes the defeat in a great measure to the fact that he was given the farmers by the Conservative Federal Government. Mr. Gaetz, in an interview said he was quite satisfied with the result and "did not mind the defeat himself, but was sorry for Premier Brownlee." Mr. Bannerman expresses himself as quite satisfied and Mr. Bray doesn't give a darn.

MR. PETER HANSON

The whole community was grieved to learn that Mr. Peter Hanson had passed away suddenly of heart failure. Mr. Hanson was born in 1861 in Fleun, Denmark. At the age of 18 he came to the United States and pioneered in the then new district of Burwell, Nebraska. After ten years he came to Alberta in April, 1900, and homesteaded where the family now reside. His interest in the new country was so great that he was able to induce many of his countrymen to come to Alberta and take up land. Mr. Hanson was always ready to help in public affairs, and held for many years the position of road master for the district, and his work speaks for itself.

A large number gathered at the family residence to attend the funeral which was conducted by Rev. R. B. Layton, assisted by Rev. H. D. Riggs. Mrs. Hanson and the following children survive: Mrs. Lynes Braithwaite, Utah; Mrs. John Hordal, Portland, Ore.; Louise, Wetaskiwin; William, Inspector for Burns' Creckeries, Edmonton; Edward, Markerville; Henry, Lebberidge; Harry and Mrs. Guy Paisley, Lacombe. The family extend their thanks to all friends who helped them in their sorrow and to all who sent floral tributes of sympathy, especially to the community and to the Masonic Lodge.

SPRUCEVILLE

The Spruceville Chicken Supper and Dance will be held on December 4th, in the Community Hall. The Star Orchestra will furnish the music. Admission, adults 40c; children 25c, dance extra. The Progressive U.F.A. and U.F.W.A. will hold their regular meeting on November 24th, at 7 p.m. in the Community Hall. Mr. W. Irvine, M.P. will be the speaker, subject "The Present Crisis." Do not miss it. Hostesses Mrs. O. Young and Mrs. H. Gotschlich. South side bring cakes. Roll call: "What I am most thankful for this year."

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Long and family wish to thank all those who so kindly rendered assistance during the illness and since the death of their beloved son and brother, Herbert. They wish to especially thank the doctors and staff of the Lacombe Hospital for their great kindness, and also to thank those who sent floral tokens of sympathy.

WOMEN FIND CHEAP FLOUR

In times of stress, even the soundest judgments are temporary aberrations. Ideas of false economy creep in. Contrary to their better judgment, women have been putting up with cheap, poorly milled flour. This flour, much of it unfit for human consumption has been going into homes of Western Canada where never before was anything tolerated except the very finest quality of scientifically milled flour. The amazing thing is that "the difference in cost between CLEAN, PURE, high quality flour and CHEAP, poorly

PER DAY FOR A FAMILY OF FOUR

Government statistics show that on the average, each man, woman and child consume two 96 lb. bags of flour per year. The price of cheap, low grade flour will range anywhere from 20c. to 45c. per bag under that of quality flours. To play safe, figure that the difference between cheap, poorly milled flour and clean, pure, high quality flour is not to exceed 45c. per bag. Since each person consumes two bags per year, it would mean a difference of 90c. per person per year.

For a family of four, the difference would be four times 90c., or $3.60 per year, which is less than 1c. per day for 365 days. Therefore, housewives need not put up with unappetizing bread when they can get in cost between CLEAN, PURE Flour, and cheap, poorly milled flour is only 1c. PER DAY FOR A FAMILY OF FOUR.

BURGARS INVADE BENTLEY

Const. Sam English was called to Bentley on Saturday morning to investigate a couple of break-ins at that village during Friday night. The burglars first attacked the Co-operative Store, and gained entrance by forcing a back window into the room. They made preparations for blowing the safe, and had carried a pile of blankets down stairs, evidently to deaden the explosion, when they discovered that the safe was unlocked. They made away with a quantity of merchandise, including leather gloves, wool sweaters, and a black leather coat.

Possibly short of gas, the marauders next tackled the Imperial Oil office, operated by Russell Garrie, and helped themselves to a quantity of gas and oil, and then struck out for parts unknown.

Const. English is of the opinion that the gang is the same one that has been burglarizing country stores for some months, and their procedure was the same as in the case of the burglary of the Martin store at Blackfalds some weeks ago.

OBTAINING A GOOD YIELD OF ALFALFA

A good stand of alfalfa in Central Alberta when grown from Alberta grown seed, will continue to produce good crops for several years, and will prove the hardest of the different legumes and the most productive of the different hay crops a farmer can grow.

Experiments and experience indicate that there are certain seasons with an abundance of moisture, when it is very easy to get a good catch of alfalfa and that there are dry seasons when it is necessary to be much more careful in seeding the crop. In favorable years good stands are secured when the seed is broadcast with a nurse crop of wheat or barley following a summer fallow or intertilled crop. Seeding with a nurse crop of oats on land that is dry—or spring ploughing cannot be recommended. If the land is very dry, packing merely pulverizes the soil and apparently cannot raise subsoil moisture to the surface to germinate the seed. A good rule is the only solution for such a problem.

Experience teaches that it is wise to sow alfalfa without a nurse crop. While this means a loss of one season's crop, it should be borne in mind that a good stand is one of the most important factors in the production of this crop, and since a stand of alfalfa is good for several years, the loss of one season's grain crop is not very important.

The fine seeds of alfalfa require a seed-bed that has a firm soil, that is fine in blith, and moist. Alfalfa seed is very small in size and, if seeded too deep, will produce plants which either lack vigor when they emerge or are completely smothered. The soil should be firm so that the moisture will be near the surface to facilitate germination. Thorough packing after seeding will facilitate germination and pay handsome dividends.

The most satisfactory method of securing a stand of alfalfa is as follows: Use a piece of stubble land which was intended for summer fallow and which is reasonably free from perennial weeds. This land should be disced or cultivated early in the spring to germinate weed seed and volunteer grain which are ploughed down as soon as possible after grain seeding is completed. This land should be worked down into a fine seed-bed such as one would use for a garden, and kept well harrowed at weekly intervals to destroy as many crops of weed seedlings as possible before sowing the alfalfa. Such treatment will destroy a large number of weeds and will firm the soil and leave it in ideal condition for the seed.

The seed should be drilled at the rate of 12 to 15 pounds per acre, and only deep enough to assure proper covering from one to one and one-half inches deep—and the land thoroughly packed after seeding. Deep seeding may result in a total loss due to failure of the seedlings to emerge above the ground.

Delay seeding until the latter part of June and thus avoid the possibility of the stand being destroyed by cutworms, which are usually past epidemic by June 20. Seeding during the latter part of June on a well prepared seed-bed will allow plenty of time for the plants to develop a vigorous growth before the winter sets in. Sowing later than the first week in July cannot be recommended.

The first year's growth should not be clipped back too close or pastured, but allowed to go into the winter with a good top to hold the snow and provide winter protection. A stand developed in the summer will provide heavy yields for several years with very little attention in the more humid areas of the prairie.

TORONTO'S COMMUNIST TRIAL

(The Journal)
How much was involved in the trial of the eight Communists at Toronto has been recognized everywhere in the Dominion and even far beyond our borders. The keen interest with which the case was followed on that account was enhanced by the dramatic character of some of the revelations. That the accused received a fair trial is admitted by their counsel and, in view of the composition of the jury, it could hardly be denied that the trial was a success. The Communists' prejudices were responsible for the convictions. These must have a powerful influence on the future of the Communist movement in Canada.

The charges that the crown preferred were of a most serious character. It undertook to prove that the men were parties to a seditious conspiracy and that they were active members of an association that was unlawful because it sought to bring about changes within the country by the use of violence. Evidence was presented that according to the prosecution had shown that the Communist party had been organized here by money sent by Moscow and that it planned to seize power in Canada in the same way as those by whom it was encouraged and supported had done in Russia.

If any group of persons were guilty of all this, it was essential that steps be taken to put an end to such activities in the Dominion. If the law as it stood did not permit their being dealt with effectively, the only thing to do was to amend it to meet the challenge. That, the facts having been established, it has been found possible to secure convictions under the existing criminal code is cause for congratulation. Anyone who undertakes to follow the example of the men against whom Thursday night's verdict was rendered now knows that he does so in defiance of Canada's laws and that the consequence for him may be very grave.

But while it was imperative that the resources of the law be given the test that they have received, there is bound to be a strong feeling among many who were anxious to have this done that the sentences were too severe. That passed by the judge on seven of the accused was imprisonment for five years and for three in the case of the eighth man. In addition deportation of the seven men who were not born in Canada was recommended. While the seizure of all the property of the Communist party in the country was authorized.

One may fully appreciate the gravity of the offence and yet be convinced that the giving of such long terms is a mistake. The defence council told the judge that his clients were all common working men who had become involved in an offence, the seriousness of which they did not realize. Whether that is so or not, it is undoubtedly true that the work in which they were engaged has not up to now been established as of a criminal nature. Accordingly the severity of the sentences is apt to create sympathy for them which either they or their employers will find means of capitalizing.

The important thing was to make the law clear. This having been done through the registering of the convictions, lighter punishments were advisable in view of the fact that the prosecution was a departure in our practice. For future offences increasingly severe penalties could have been imposed. With such a beginning, however, as has been made by the Ontario judge, it would not be surprising if more difficulty were experienced from now on in inducing juries to convict.

CAVALON

"EAST IS WEST"
At the Avalon This Week End Rich in romance and the intrigue of the Orient, "East Is West" first scored heavily in the stage play with Fay Bainter in the role of Ming Toy when produced in New York, where it enjoyed popularity for more than two years.

Later produced as a silent picture, "East Is West" scored with theatre audiences and the Avalon theatre management believes that the talking screen version will be even more enjoyable than either of its predecessors.

Lupe Velez, the feminine lure of many screen hits, is said to be adorable in the role of the piquant Ming Toy who is sold by a heartless father to the operator of a Chinese "love boat" Lewis Ayres, the boy of "All Quiet on the Western Front" fame, makes his debut as a romantic star as Billy Benson, the wealthy American who falls in love with Ming Toy. Edwin G. Robinson, one of the most famous stage character actors, is cast as the menacing Charlie Yung, half-caste Chinese ruler of San Francisco Chinatown.

Miss Velez does her first screen singing in "East Is West" when she sings the never-to-be forgotten "Chinese Lullaby."

AN UNKNOWN SOLDIER

Waiting on weary feet amid the chill November winds, his mind, west leaping back, Back fifteen years across life's rugged track To stand, once more, beside that shell-torn hill.

The guns were mute, the air was strangely still. Silent the day as if God's healing breath Had charmed away that carnival of death.

And purged mankind of every earthly ill. And then the welcome home, the fervent cheers, The smiling throngs that gripped him by the hand: Ah, he was proud to tread his native land.

The land that would remember through the years —

The breadline moved ahead and by awoke, An unknown soldier, hungry, jobless, broke.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

Lacombe district has this year been wonderfully blessed by Providence. We have had wonderful crops and while the price is not all that could be desired the yield has helped out to a great extent. The grain has been harvested and threshed and quite a bit marketed.

The result of the harvest means much not only to the farmer, but also to the townspeople. The Western Globe has been helped out by the crop conditions and fall in prices did not press for our subscriptions, but this year we find it absolutely necessary to get our accounts paid and we make this appeal to our subscribers, feeling confident that they, realizing that we must have the money will come through.

Your account may only amount to $1.50, but we have a lot of these and if you pay and the other fellow pays, we will be helped out of the present condition.

Look at the label on your paper and the next time you are in town, drop into the office and pay up. Please don't leave it until another time—do it now. We really need the money.

Mr. David Bowman, Mr. Reid, Mr. Horace Seymour and son, David, were guests at the paragon for lunch on Wednesday. Mr. Seymour was interested in looking over the property at the mouth of the Blindman river as a possible Park Site and Bird Sanctuary. Mr. Bowman secured several large slabs of the same which he took home, hoping to get a number of good lead fossils.

Mrs. Capron was invited to a surprise party in her honor at the home of Mrs. B. Fickler, last Wednesday. In spite of the snow and cold on Saturday, the Helping Hand held their annual Bazaar with very good results. The Guiding Star C.G.I.T. group took in $15.00 for the sale of candy and their Parcel Post. The feature of the evening programme was a play entitled "The Minister's Wife" given by the C.G.I.T. girls. Besides several songs and recitations Miss Margaret Aldwinckle, of Lacombe, delighted the audience with a couple of recitations in her usual pleasing manner.

An illustrated lecture was given in the United Church on Monday night for the pupils of the school. The first was twenty-four slides on the story in Rip Van Winkle, the second eighty-six pictures of the wild flowers of Alberta. Mr. Ansley told the story and gave the names of the flowers. Over fifty were present. Prizes were offered to both rooms for the two pupils in each grade who could write down in the fifteen minutes the most names of the flowers shown.

The Institute of Religious Education for the Lacombe Presbytery will meet with the Fairview Church on Friday afternoon or evening.

Services next Sunday at Spruceview at 11:15 and at Blackfalds at 7:30.

DIFFERENCE IN COST ONLY 1¢ PER DAY FOR FAMILY OF FOUR

1c Difference You wouldn't serve vegetables from the garden without washing them. Why bake with flour made from unwashed wheat?

Before wheat is milled in the modern plants of Robin Hood, it is screened with special machinery, then scoured in special washing vats. More than 100,000 gallons of water are used every 24 hours by each wheat washer. The DIRT is carried away like MUDDY WATER from a scrubbed back porch. Then a final rinsing spray of fresh water leaves the wheat bright and CLEAN.

What happens to this DIRT when flour is made in mills not equipped for washing? Is it any wonder your bread is gray and unappetizing when made with CHEAP poorly milled flour?

Amazing Facts The difference between Every Woman cheap, poorly milled flour Should Know is not more than 45c per bag or 90c per person per year (government statistics say every person consumes two bags of flour per year on the average).

For a family of four, the difference would be 4 times 90c or $3.60 per year, which is less than 1c per day for 365 days. So we say,—"The difference in cost between CLEAN, PURE Robin Hood flour, and cheap, poorly milled flour is only 1c PER DAY FOR A FAMILY OF FOUR."

Germany Claims An Interesting Discovery

New Tobacco Plant Said To Be Free From Nicotine

Remembering that one of the principal objections to the use of tobacco is the harmful nature of the nicotine contained in it, the reputed discovery in Germany of a new tobacco plant free of that substance, is filled with considerable interest. After a year's experiments, the head of the institute at which the new plant has been developed declares that it retains the merits of ordinary tobacco without its chief hygienic objection.

The people who are so loud in their protests against the use of tobacco, some of whom would ban it as alcohol has been banned in the United States, will have little cause for complaint if this new plant that has been produced in Germany with a view to replacing the present tobacco plant becomes widespread in its adoption, and if the tobacco of the future, while retaining its odor, loses its nicotine content.

For Needy Children

Saskatchewan Schools May Lend Helping Hand To Santa Claus

Saskatchewan schools may lend a hand to Santa Claus in preparation for his annual Christmas visitation, and so ensure that he shall have sufficient stock of toys on hand to go his nocturnal rounds without stopping up a single home, if they respond to the call of the Provincial Boy Scouts Association and the suggestion of the Provincial Department of Education. The Department of Education has endorsed the proposal that the schools of the province co-operate with the Boy Scouts Association in the establishment of toy repair shops as a "Christmas Good Turn" on behalf of needy children in the community. The objective needs no commendation or explanation other than that, though depression may have penetrated the home, it shall not invade the hearts of the children during the traditional season of peace and goodwill.

Recognition of the suggestion of the Scouts' suggestion, the Department of Education has urged co-operation of the teachers on the ground that such activities as the toy repair shop involves "correlate closely with the content of the school curriculum in industrial arts and in citizenship."

The plan of collecting and renovating toys for ultimate distribution among needy children has been developed on a Dominion-wide basis. Recent years, by the Boy Scouts, Christmas of 1929 saw some 114 toy repair shops in operation. Some 50,000 children who, otherwise, would have been doomed to bitter disappointment on Christmas morning. Last year, more toy shops were organized, and an even greater number of needy children made happy. Saskatchewan boy scout groups contributed their share towards making the scheme an unqualified success. This year, with apparently greater zeal, particularly throughout the southern portion of the province, the call to service is more insistent. Recognizing the wider claim, the co-operation of the schools throughout Saskatchewan has been sought, the Department has given the movement its blessing, and recommends it to the attention of school teachers. The toy repair shops should have commenced operation not later than November 15 and have all work cleared up by December 22, so that the boys and girls may be able to make their own Christmas preparations, it is urged.

Information on the organization of toy repair shops may be obtained, if required, from the provincial headquarters, the Saskatchewan Department of Education, 205 Darnley Block, Regina. Organization covers collection of old or discarded toys, their repair and renovation, and their distribution to needy beneficiaries. It is suggested that boys and girls attending school should be organized into teams to go around their own homes, enlist the co-operation of relatives and neighbors, and in the work, and through church and school bulletins.

Having organized a source of supply of "raw material," it is suggested, of course, to have a plant, workshop or factory in which to do the renovating. Perhaps the school can be a room, or boy scout headquarters. The church may supply the need in this respect, or some vacant store or unused building may be placed at the disposal of Santa's young assistants.

So long as the place is bright, lighted and is large enough to fulfill the requirements, it will be suitable. Then comes the matter of the actual repair. Some may call for ingenuity greater than the young people, themselves, can supply. In such cases, it is suggested that the services of the school manual training instructors be requisitioned, the assumption being that they will be glad to respond. Boys taking manual training can also supply demands for "skilled labor." School principal, boy scout club, and teachers will be found ready to co-operate and it is suggested that wherever a boy scout group has established a toy repair shop all in the community contribute to its success.

Ordinary repair work on small toys, scout equipment has shown, can be done surprisingly well by a group of older boys and girls who will work under a "director of repairs" who is a Scoutmaster or some boy in handi-craft and a well-stocked tool chest. Mothers and older sisters, it is said, usually prove very sympathetic, and under material assistance, the matter of doll's clothing and repairs on woody animals.

The Scout organization issues warning, however, that workers should be garbed in serviceable old clothes for, while paint and enamel can be converted into a battered and decrepit express wagon, old or kiddle car into a thing of double boiler until they are completely ruined a perfectly good suit if distributed too lavishly over its surface.

As regards distribution of the toys, it is suggested that the matter be handled by a Scout Group Committee (where there is one), or by a Committee of the school established to take care of it. After local needs are provided for, it is suggested that any remainder be divided among the charitable agencies in the nearest community, for distribution there on a ground that, if a community-wide effort is made to collect toys, they should be distributed on a community-wide basis.

Where toy shops are organized, leaders are requested to register with the Provincial Scout Headquarters in Regina, in order to facilitate the better organization of what is being termed "the greatest annual country-wide service activity and in which many agencies are lending a helping hand." Toy repair shops also are urged to report final results, giving some idea of the number of toys distributed, the number of children made happy through the efforts made.

Edison Estate

Two Sons Of Famous Inventor Inherited Bulk Of Wealth

Will of Thomas A. Edison was filed for probate recently, naming as executors of his estate two of his sons, Charles and Theodore.

Virtually his entire estate was left to the same two sons. Adequate provision for the widow was made prior to the inventor's death.

All of his shares of the capital stock of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., are to be divided equally between Charles and Theodore Edison.

The properties grouped under the name of Edison Laboratories also are left to the two sons. All of the late inventor's government bonds, railroad bonds and first mortgage bonds in the Edison Portland Cement Company are left in trust to his six children.

Among other bequests were $10,000 to William H. Woodward, the late inventor's secretary; $10,000 to John S. Ott, laboratory associate of the electrical wizard for more than a half century, who died as a result of shock occasioned by the news of Edison's death; and $5,000 to Fred P. Ott, a brother of the inventor's laboratory assistant.

Those were the only bequests made to persons outside of the Edison family.

There were no bequests to charitable or religious organizations.

Charles Edison said shortly after the will was filed that the Thomas A. Edison Industries, Inc., has a surplus of $7,000,000. Unofficially however, it was stated that the corporation is in a healthy financial condition, approximately $12,000,000.

Although not stipulated in the will itself, the Edison estate at Llewellyn Park, on the outskirts of West Orange, N.J., was left by the inventor to his wife.

May Eliminate Barnacle

Biologist Makes 'Discovery' Which Means Favor For Ship Owners

That a barnacle can smell became known upon the return from the Fortunate Islands of Dr. J. Paul Vischer, head of the Department of Biology of Western Reserve University. And because its nose knows, there may be solved one of the most vexing maritime shipping problems, that of keeping vessels' bottoms free of the crustaceans, saving ship owners, it is estimated, $100,000 annually.

Dr. Vischer, an authority on the barnacle, learned during his two month investigation that barnacles react to "ritinase," a new liquid he has discovered in discovering chemicals repellant to the barnacle and mixing them accordingly in paints applied to ship bottoms. "Barnacles have been traveling as excess baggage for unknown ages," Dr. Vischer said. "We have fossilized barnacles that are 200,000, 500,000 years old. They stowed away and rode free in many places before ships were thought of."

The ex-Khedive is the head of this new profession. For he has wealth, a steady income to compensate him for the loss of his kingly rights, houses in France and Switzerland, and a private steamer yacht in which to go whither he pleases—except Egypt and Turkey, which are forbidden him.

Just a Suggestion

Name Which Our Neighbors Across the Border Might Adopt

In France it is "Etats Unis," in Italy it is "Stati Uniti," in Spain it is "Estados Unidos," in Canada, Britain and other English-speaking countries, including its own, it is "United States," or sometimes "Americas."

Just why it should be "America" is one of those points that could be and have been argued for years without an answer. Geographically it is not the original Amerigo, or the Americas which Columbus discovered. Politically it is only a unit in the western hemisphere of "America."

But all the same United States has assumed the title of "America," and its people call themselves "Americans," raise an artificial barrier of resentment to dislodge within U.S. borders, all the way from "Am-arr-icans" to "Am-ur-ricans."

The Latin Americans will have none of it. The name, as with international contact, testify, "burns them up" in the Latin-American countries. They say the United States has no monopoly on the name. They say they are also "Americans." They say—and so do many European countries—that they don't like the assumption that goes with the use of the word.

In short, United States citizens, by the adoption of the term "Americans," raise an artificial barrier of resentment in many parts of the world.

Certainly Canadians and British need have no quarrel with it. Canadians are Canadians and it would never occur to them to call themselves Americans in any case.

But others do object. What can be done? Obviously, even if they wanted to, our good neighbors to the South couldn't call themselves "United Statesers." The thing simply isn't done. And "Uncle Sammers" is no better. And "Yankers" already connotes a limited meaning.

Well, why not "Usanians"? That is euphonious, it has meaning and it is important—a certain need for "ritinase." It derives its name from the United States of North America, with the "U" thrown in for good measure.

A Boston lawyer has used the word "Usanians" for years. All it needs is popularizing. There is no question that, properly handled, the name would sweep the country, rivaling mail jang and miniature golf. They might even make a presidential issue of it next November. It would be a pleasant relief from prohibition and the tariff.—Vancouver Sun.

Kept At Safe Distance

Sir Eric Geddes Objected To Salute From Grandfather

Sir Eric Geddes, born in India of Scottish parents, 56 years ago, has occasionally found some of the many honors thrust upon him a little embarrassing. During the war, when he supervised military railways, he held the rank of Major-General, and had to wear the uniform of that rank. One day when pacing up and down near a sentry post in France, deep in some problem, he was distracted by the fact that every time he came within a certain distance the soldier on guard smartly presented arms. At last, with a touch of irritation, he begged the man to desist. "Dorrie air," was the answer. "It's the regulations, so I must just go on doing it." After that Sir Eric carefully maintained his distance.

Approval Broadens Out

Saskatchewan Government Notifies Ottawa Of Acceptance Of Poultry Policy

Official notification has been received by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa of the acceptance by the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan of the federal "approval" policies for poultry. This marks a further step in the fuller development of the poultry industry on a truly national basis. The "Approval Policies" include Record of Performance for poultry, Flock Approval, Cockerel Approval, Hatchery Approval and approved chick production. The farm flock is finding an increasingly important place as a "cash crop" in Saskatchewan, where "eggs" and "meat" production combine to form a farm industry which is rapidly growing in importance.

A. M. CAMPBELL'S

ANOTHER MASTER FARMER FROM LACOMBE

John Mole, now of Ladner, B.C., but formerly of the Lacombe district, has been awarded the Master Farmer Medal and Certificate, following the final decision made by the Awards Committee for B.C., consisting of J. B. Munro, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Victoria; Dean F. M. Clement, University of B.C.; W. T. Hunter, Superintendent, Dominion Experimental Station, Summerville, B.C.; and Lyman T. Chapman, Editor, The Nor-West Farmer and Farm and Home, Winnipeg, Man., the farm magazine sponsoring the Master Farmer Movement in Canada. Other Master Farmers honored this year include: Andrew Anderson, Alaska, Sask.; Oscar Moorehouse, Carleton Place, Ont.; L. F. Solly, Westholm, B.C.; Stuart Gellie, Harmsworth, Man.; and John R. Hume, Souris, Man. This year's group makes a total of sixteen Master Farmers in Canada. Master Farmer Percy Switzer, prominent farmer and stock breeder of the Lacombe District, of whom Master Farmer Mole was a former neighbor, was one of the ten Master Farmers honored in 1930.

Born on the north arm of the Fraser River, as he describes his ancestral home, Master Farmer John Mole, of Ladner, B.C., started to farm for himself by renting his father's farm in the Spring of 1906, at the age of 24 years. In 1913 he left the Coast country and tried his hand at farming in the Lacombe district in Alberta, but finally settled on his present farm near Ladner, in 1926, where he now operates a 212-acre dairy farm in the Fraser Delta area.

Prior to being purchased by Mr. Mole, this farm had been rented for fourteen years and had fallen into the rut that the great majority of rented farms do. However, this farm now boasts of a modern home with all the comforts and appointments of a city house. The grounds are planned for future development but are attractive in their present form.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Mole take an active part in community affairs, the former holding an office in the Church, Farmers' Co-operative, as well as other community enterprises. There are two daughters and one son in the family, the latter now in partnership with his father (John Mole & Son) in the operation of the farm.

A new dairy barn has been constructed recently and it is up-to-date in every detail, complete with milking machine, water carriage, water bowls, also, large hay rack and grain bins above the stalls. Some thirty head of Holstein cows, mostly purebred, are milked the year round, the average production per cow approximating 12,000 lbs. of milk per year. Corn silage, red clover hay are the main roughages used, supplemented by a meal mixture consisting of oats, barley, wheat bran and high protein feeds such as soybean or linseed meal. Canning peas, clover hay and timothy hay are sold as cash crops from time to time.

WHEAT TURNS UPWARD

(Christian Science Monitor)

October was a month of memorable developments in the economic world, but none was so spectacular as the upswing in the price of wheat, which improved some 40 per cent. in half that number of days.

No commodity price can stay long below the costs of production. If there is no profit in growing or marketing wheat, the grower or marketer will turn to other commodities, and the stock available to consumers will therefore decline. Moreover, the price decline always attracts new consumption from people who cannot afford the higher prices, and making the commodity, which pushes prices higher. This is partly what has happened to wheat. But it is not the whole story. If over a commodity got frightened over the Five Year Plan, it was wheat. Last year the Soviet Union harvested a bumper crop, out of which it sent abroad some 110,000,000 bushels. Judged from the hue and cry that was raised in other wheat regions, one would have thought that the Five-Year Plan henceforward the Russian rule, irrespective of weather conditions. But the Russian wheat belt, like every other wheat belt, is affected by the vagaries of the weather, which, the experts say, has this year been more adverse to Russian production than to that of other continental areas.

Uncertainty as to how far the Russian crop has been cut has given rise to many rumors that apparently are not based on anything approaching fact. For instance, it seems to be an exaggeration to say that the U.S.S.R. will not export wheat "this year or next." All that is known, and this is confirmed in the Soviet publications, is that wheat prospects are not bearing out the figures of the Five-Year Plan.

The market has given evidence that it has believed the wild reports that appeared originally about Russian conditions. If so, the violent upswing, which has been carried forward by powerful operators, may not last. Yet there are enough grounds for the assertion that the world's farmers have left the low wheat point behind them. This in itself is encouraging. What is wanted is that wheat should recover until it provides the farmer with the livelihood that was denied him when he was only getting a quarter a bushel for his crop.

Such a recovery as has taken place in the last four weeks has put millions of dollars into the pockets of the farm population of the world. The benefit will not accrue solely to the rural community. In adding to their income, the farmers have added to their buying power, which may be expected to find reflection in fresh demands upon factory capacity. The world can never be soundly based unless the rural and urban classes and the agricultural and industrial countries are in a right relation. That we are returning to that equilibrium is one of the most encouraging signs glimpsed on the business horizon for months.

Sweeping down from the far north with snow-laden wings, the storm king held possession of Lacombe and district Friday.

A fatal accident due to the storm was reported from Stettler, while two men were injured in traffic crashes in Edmonton.

The fatality occurred when an automobile crashed into the rear of a parked truck which the motorist had failed to observe due to the fall of sleet. A section of piping, protruding from the rear of the truck struck Mack Giesler, 19, of Gadsby, a passenger in the automobile, in the face. She died from the injuries.

Wm. Macintosh of Lacombe was an occupant of the car and received injuries in the crash.
